The contents of this material in no way represent the policies, views or attitudes of the U. S. Government or of the parties to any distribution arrangement.

PROCUREMENT OF JPRS REPORTS

All JPRS reports may be ordered from the Clearinghouse for Federal Scientific and Technical Information. Reports published prior to 1 February 1963 can be provided, for the most part, only in photocopy (xerox). Those published after 1 February 1963 will be provided in printed form.

Details on special subscription arrangements for any JPRS report will be provided upon request.

All current JPRS reports are listed in the Monthly Catalog of U. S. Government Publications which is available on subscription at $4.50 per year ($6.00 foreign) from the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C. Both prices include an annual index.

All current JPRS scientific and technical reports are cataloged and subject-indexed in Technical Translations. This publication is issued semimonthly by the Clearinghouse for Federal Scientific and Technical Information and is available on subscription ($12.00 per year domestic, $16.00 foreign) from the Superintendent of Documents. Semi-annual indexes to Technical Translations are available at additional cost.

THE PENETRATION OF LATIN AMERICA BY THE CHINESE COMMUNISTS

[Following is a translation of a Chinese-language monograph by Ming Chen-hua entitled Chung-kung Tui La-ting Mei-chou ti Ch'en-t'ou (Penetration of Latin America by Chinese Communists), Taipeh, September 1959, 50 pages.]

I. Brief Introduction of Latin America

1. General Description

Latin America refers to the area colonized during the 16th-19th centuries by the Latin speaking countries, of which Spain occupied the largest area including Mexico between North and Central Americas; Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and Panama in Central America; Colombia, Venezuela, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, Paraguay, Uruguay, Argentina, and Chile in South America; Cuba and Dominican Republic in the West Indies; the Portuguese former colony, Brazil; and the French colony, Haiti, in the West Indies. There are now 20 countries in what is known today as Latin America.

Geographically, Latin America is also known as Central and South America. Central America occupies an area of 560,000 square kilometers with a population of about 10 million. South America is south of North America bordering on the Atlantic Ocean in the East, the South Pacific Ocean in the south, the Pacific Ocean in the west and the Caribbean and Isthmus of Panama in the north, totaling 18,141,000 square kilometers in area with a population of 130 million. The West Indies is situated southeast of the North American continent, extending like an arch, and consisting of thousands of large and small islands, totaling 236,000 square kilometers. Central America and the West Indies are in the tropics, and the larger part of South America is in the tropics and part in the sub-tropic zone. Major crops of this area are sugar, coffee, cocoa, corn, coconuts, rubber, bananas and palms. Its industry is not highly developed.

The Latin American countries have many things in common due to their geography and history. They had long been colonies but later became independent nations. They are mostly agricultural countries with agricultural products being their major exports. The exception is Venezuela which is famous for its petroleum resources. They are Catholic countries. Their common language is Spanish except Brazil which uses Portuguese, and Haiti which uses French as the official language. However, English has now become popular in these countries. As to their ethnic origin, negroes account for 90 percent of the population of Haiti; no Indians are found in Uruguay. In all other countries, the population consists of whites of European origin, Indians, mixture of whites and Indians, negroes, and a minority of naturalized Orientals.

Under the protection of the Monroe Doctrine announced by President Monroe in 1823, these countries were able to escape interference or annexation by European powers and gradually became independent. On the other hand, they gradually became dependent on the United States, particularly since the Twentieth Century. Economically they depend on the United States for assistance. They are influenced by the US in world politics. During the last two World Wars, Latin America did not suffer any damages and enjoyed stability. In fact, Latin America was a heaven on earth to the mind of many people. Although these countries have taken concerted actions as a group in world politics, frictions and conflicts exist among them. Even since 1890, these countries have held conferences, once every 4 years, to discuss their common problems. They have formed the Pan-American Union. It was decided at the eighth session of the Pan-American Union conference held in 1938 that a foreign ministers' meeting would be called in case the security of one country is threatened. This was the origin of the Pan-American Foreign Ministers' Conference. At the third session of the Foreign Ministers' Conference, the Western Hemisphere Defense Pact was signed. At the ninth session of the Pan-American Conference in 1948, it was decided to combine the Pan-American Union and the Western Hemisphere Defense Pact nations into the Organization of American States, consisting of 22 states in North and South America, except Canada. This organization has been used for mutual consultation and discussion of their common problems (see appendixes 1 and 2). [Appendix 1 illegible.]

2. Overseas Chinese in Latin America

Chinese migration to Latin America began early in 1810 when the Portuguese contracted with several hundreds of Chinese workers to plant tea in the capital of Brazil. This is the earliest record of Chinese migration to Latin America. Cha is the word for tea in Portuguese. This word represents a transliteration of the Chinese equivalent for tea. In 1844, the British colony of Quayana contracted with Chinese workers. It was followed by Peru, Chile and Cuba. More Chinese were employed as a substitute for the black slaves who were then in short supply. Treatment of the Chinese workers became worse and worse as the number of Chinese increased. They were treated also like the negro slaves. Only about one hundred of the 4,000 Chinese migrant workers brought in to the Yin-cha Island (south of Lima) survived the severe treatment between the period 1851-1860. This treatment did not stop until 1874 when, upon being notified by the sympathetic United States Government, the Ching Government sent missions to Cuba and Beru and negotiated with the Spanish. The overseas Chinese in Latin America today are largely descendants of this group of hardluck Chinese.

The Chinese in Cuba, Peru and Chile were hostile to the colonial powers of that time and shared the aspiration for national independence of the countries in which they resided. For instance, during the Cuban revolution, the Chinese voluntarily joined the fight against the Spanish rulers. Many of them were heroes of the Chinese Taiping Rebellion. According to Cuban archives, the Chinese revolutionary heroes include Colonel Shang, Colonel Lai Hua, Lieutenant Hu Teh and hundreds of others. After they returned to civilian life, they even declined monetary rewards and pensions. In 1879, it was the participation of Chinese that led to the Chilean victory over the joint invasion by Peru and Bolivia. Since then the Chilean people have been very grateful to the Chinese. More and more Chinese then migrated to Chile and received special treatment by the government and people of that country.

Available data indicate that Chinese are found in all Latin American republics except Paraguay. The total number is 94,556. The number of Chinese exceeds 25,000 in Cuba; 20,000 in Peru; 10,000 in Panama and Mexico; 3,000-5,000 in Guatemala, Ecuador and Nicaragua; 1,000-3,000 in Costa Rica, Venezuela, Chile and Colombia; and under 1,000 in other countries. Bolivia has the least Chinese amounting to only 78. Most of these Chinese come from Kwangtung, mainly from the Chiu-chiang district of Nan-hai, and from Pan-yu and Shan-teh. Chinese in Latin America are mostly operators of groceries, restaurants, cafes and other small businesses. Some countries like Panama refuse business licenses to non-citizens. Others, including Mexico, stipulate that when one Chinese is employed, 4 natives must also be on the payroll. Provisions such as those have handicapped the economic development of the Chinese. As to the sex ratio, males quietly outnumber females. The male to female ratio in some countries is as high as 370 to one. Hence, about 70 percent of the Chinese males are married to natives with their descendants becoming non-Chinese. Actually, the overseas Chinese are not willing to marry foreigners. There are some Chinese schools scattered in Latin America. But there are no schools for the Chinese in many areas. Many young overseas Chinese cannot write or even speak Chinese. There are 10 Chinese daily newspapers, 4 weekly magazines, one semi-monthly and 4 monthly magazines. Facilities at these Chinese publications need to be improved and a wider circulation must be promoted. All except one or two Chinese publications are anti-communist. The overseas Chinese community is convinced, through bitter experience, that unity means strength. Thus, Chinese communities in all Latin American Republics except Argentina have a headquarters of Chinese Merchants Association. There are many local organizations organized by profession, by native hometown, by clan, by cultural interest or by religion. There are 50 such organizations for the Chinese in Havana alone. The Kuomintang has offices wherever there are Chinese, a majority of which operate openly. These organizations of the Kuomintang generally work for the improvement of Chinese welfare in cooperation with local Chinese organizations. An overwhelming majority of the overseas Chinese are anti-Communist and pro-Nationalists. They have established anti-Communist organizations and contributed funds for use in entertaining Chinese troops, in honor of the birthday of Chiang Kai-shek, and in support of the battle front. Those Chinese are generally in support of the local government's anti-Communist and anti-Soviet policy and loyal to the Republic of China.

II. Recent Disturbances in Latin America

The political situation in Latin America is changing rapidly under influences from within and without. Causes of the disturbances are: (1) economic backwardness, (2) rise of nationalism, (3) expanding influences of Communism, and (4) the international Communist conspiracy.

1. Numerous Riots

Most of the 20 Latin American Republics are backward nations, lacking the necessary capital and techniques to explore their otherwise rich resources. Foreign capital controls most of the export commodities of these countries but contributes little to the national economy of the host country. For instance, Cuba's coffee and sugar and Venezuela's oil are controlled by foreign interests. Furthermore, all countries in Latin America, except a few such as Mexico and Guatemala, suffered from inflation because of unfavorable world markets for the farm products and raw materials they exported. Economic growth in these countries is very slow, with a per capita national income of about $300. In some nations, the average per capita income was only US $100 (such as in Bolivia). In recent years the population pressure in these countries has increased. American aid has seldom satisfied the people. Hence, an anti-US feeling is widespread. Such feeling is also attributed to the US support of some Latin American dictatorships, a support given on account of the anti-communist policy of such dictatorships. It is also attributed to the insufficient understanding toward the new forces and nationalist aspiration of the Latin American countries on the part of the United States Government. Since 1954, nationalism has risen and the revolutionary force has been gaining in strength. This is evidenced by the overthrow of Peron in Argentina, Jimenez in Venezuela and Batista in Cuba.

In the past year the Communist parties of the various countries have been developing rapidly. The situation has been complicated by the subversion of international communism. The result has been a series of disturbances such as the following: (1) Vice President Nixon being embarrassed by Communists when visiting Peru and Venezuela, (2) the anti-government riot in Haiti in July 1958, the capital of Argentina in January 1959 and the riot of 3 April 1959, (5) the railroad workers' strike in Mexico in March 1959, (6) the invasion of Panama by radicals in April 1959, (7) the bombing of the US Embassy and electric power plant in Guatemala by terrorist on 21 July 1959; (8) the rebellion at Argentina's three naval bases leading to the resignation of the Chief of the Argentine Navy on 24 July 1959; (9) the anti-government demonstration on 4 August 1959 by some 3,000 demonstrators in Venezuela, (10) the arrest of 2,000 army officers by the revolutionary government of Cuba on 8 August 1959, (11) the capture of an airplane which invaded Cuba from Dominican Republic on 13 August 1959, and (12) the landing of a task force from Cuba in southern Haiti on 15 August 1959. Riots in Latin America are still in the making.

2. Expansion of Internal Communist Influences

The Communist Internationale established its organizations in Latin America in 1919. The Communist organization in Mexico is one of the earliest, being established in 1919. During the past three decades Communist organizations have spread all over Latin America. Many of these organizations take different names, some of which have changed several times to conceal their identity. They include, for instance, the Labor Party in Guatemala, the Socialist Party in Nicaragua, the People's Front Party in Costa Rica and the Socialist People's Party in the Dominican Republic. Although the Communist Internationale has set up its organizations in Latin America, it has not gained rapid growth for the three reasons described below.

(a) People in Latin America are mostly Catholics and since the number of Communists are few, they cannot get enough electoral votes to organize a government.

(b) Communist activities are restricted by local governments. Although the Communist Party is legally allowed to exist, it is either outlawed or its leaders are arrested and its activities prohibited when its policy is proved contrary to the established national policy or when its activities threaten the security of the state.

(c) The Organization of American States has kept constant surveillance on Communist activities in Latin America. Exchange of information on Communist activities among members of the organization has been a deterrent to Communist expansion.

However, the Communists in Latin America have intensified their activities under the support of Sino-Soviet Communists. For instance, the incidents encountered by Nixon in his visits to Peru and Venezuela were inspired by the Communists. The strike in January 1959 at the capital of Argentina and the riot in the city area of the same capital on 3 April 1959 were also inspired by Communists. In December, 1958, Communists from Argentina, Bolivia, Cuba, Chile, Paraguay, Peru and Uruguay gathered in the capital of Chile and issued a joint declaration denouncing military bases and area defense pacts. The objective of the gathering was anti-United States. All this indicates the strengthening of Communist activities in Latin America in recent years.

According to data compiled by the United States Senate's Internal Security Subcommittee, Communist membership in Latin America has increased 5 percent from 200,000-215,000 in 1957 to 209,000-239,000 in 1958. The distribution is as follows: Argentina, 70,000-80,000; Brazil, 50,000; Venezuela, 30,000-35,000; Chile, 20,000-25,000; Cuba, 12,000; Peru, 6,000; Columbia and Mexico, 5,000 each; Bolivia, 4,000; Uruguay, 3,000; Guatemala, 1,000; other countries, under 500; minor numbers found in Haiti and the Dominican Republic. At present, Sino-Soviet Communists are infiltrating Latin American countries. It is conceivable that the Communist party organization and membership are increasing.

3. Effect of Cuban Revolution

Cuban Communists have been active. The Cuban Communist Party was outlawed by Batista about 6 years ago. Since then the Communists have joined the rebel force. The new Cuban Government which was founded in January 1959 is nationalistic and radical. Since the "July 26th" movement received support from the Communists, the Communists have been very active in the new government since its founding. In a period of two or three months, the Communists have succeeded in infiltrating the labor unions, schools, armed forces, radio stations and the press and various government agencies. Several years ago Raul Castro, now the general commander of the armed forces and brother of Fidel Castro, paid visits to the Soviet Union and Peking. Che Guevara (an Argentine citizen who took part in Guatemala revolution), Jimerez, leader of the "March 13" University Revolution Advisory Committee, and Sanchez, Minister of the Army, are all pro-Communists. Hence, Communist influences in Cuba are like a forest fire and are spreading relentlessly. Moreover, Prime Minister Castro has more than once expressed his tolerance of Communist activities. He advocated radical measures. For instance, about 2,000-3,000 former government officials were arrested, about 500 of these were put to death. The government is now continuing to liquidate the properties owned by former government personnel, carry out land reform, nationalize labor (by issuing some 50 work rules) and provide measures to increase wages by 20 percent and cut short work hours. The government also reduced rent by 50 percent, compelled businesses to pay taxes for the preceding two years, and took over the management of the Cuban Telephone Company, a United States investment. New tariff was introduced to protect domestic industry. Measures taken in the past several months were clearly calculated to curb foreign, particularly United States, investments. Anti-Americanism has been indicated in Castro's daily speeches and announcements. Most recently Castro threatened to resign in order to force the President out of office and to pursue his pro-Communist policy. All this has encouraged Communist subversion in Latin America. The Chinese Communist Premier declared at the Second Session of the People's Congress: "After a long armed struggle, the people of Cuba have finally overthrown dictator Batista who had risen under the support of United States imperialism, thus marking a new height for the nationalist, democratic movement in Latin America." According to a quotation of Radio Peking on 14 July 1959, Raul Castro was reported to have told a Chinese Communist press delegation that "Mao Tse-tung is among the personalities that command the highest admiration of Latin American youths." There is no doubt that the success of the recent Cuban revolution has given the Communists a chance to infiltrate and expand their subversive activities.

III. Chinese Communist Infiltration of Latin America

International communism has long desired penetration into Latin America. As a major instrument of international communism, the Chinese Communists have intensified their activities in Latin America. Since the Latin American countries have not fully understood the menace of communism and have underestimated the seriousness of Communist underground activities despite the fact that the Communist Party was outlawed in several countries, international Communists have been able to give support to the local communist groups in their subversive activities for the overthrow of the government. On the other hand, the Chinese Communists have employed various devices to communize Latin America, including trade, propaganda, exchange visits, and infiltration of the popular organizations of the overseas Chinese. A description of these methods is given below.

1. Development of Trade Relations

The Chinese Communists established trade relations with Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Mexico, Venezuela, and Uruguay in 1959. The value of Red China's direct trade with Latin America increased from US 7 million dollars to 13.5 million dollars in 1958. In April, 1959, Red China purchased 3 million dollars of woolen goods from Uruguay and also 2 million pounds of black tea from Chile. The tea purchases were obviously designed to take over the tea market from Free China.

In October, 1958, the Soviet Union signed trade agreements with Argentina, giving US 100 million dollars of credit to the latter for the purchase of oil refinery facilities. The Soviet Union also bartered one million dollars of petroleum for Brazilian coffee and cocoa. Eastern European satellites purchased cocoa from Brazil and sold the latter coal, rails and machinery. Rumania, Hungary and others purchased sheep wool, hide, rapeseed oil and other items from Argentina as part of Soviet trade strategy.

According to available data, the value of Soviet bloc trade with Latin America amounted to $160,000,000 in 1958, up about 30 percent from 1957.

2. Development of Red Propaganda

(a) Red China's broadcasts to Latin America have been on a weekly basis since October, 1958. The hours of broadcasting increased from 7 hours in the past to 14 hours at present. The content of the broadcast varies with each country. Recently, Radio Peking has stepped up its propaganda designed to exaggerate the conflicts among the Latin American countries so as to divide them. Spanish, English and Portuguese are the languages used.

(b) Recently, Communist China planned to establish a Chinese daily newspaper in Havana. It has already established an office for the Hsin-hua News Agency. Kung O and P'an P'ing-yen are in charge. This office of the Hsin-hua News Agency is the base of the Chinese Communist propaganda network. It is distributing news on Cuba to other Latin American countries.

(c) Chinese Communists have established the so-called "friendship" associations in 7 Latin American countries among the pro-Communists. There are 20 such associations: 7 in Argentina, 2 in Cuba, 6 in Chile one each in Uruguay, Bolivia and Colombia, and 2 in Mexico. Of these associations, 12 were founded in 1958 and 3 in 1959. They are instruments of Communist propaganda utilizing various media, such as art exhibits, movies, evening parties. The Chinese Communists use motion pictures extensively.

The Soviet Union has constantly sent propaganda materials to the Latin American countries through the mail. It is estimated that the amount of materials reaches 365,000 volumes annually in one postal route alone. The Soviet Embassy in Cuba is largely responsible for the distribution. Provocative broadcasts in Spanish to Latin America from the Soviet Union amounts to 100 hours weekly.

3. Exchange of Visits

(a) Communist China has sent various missions to visit the Latin American countries. Last September an artist group led by Chou Erh-fu toured Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Uruguay for about 10 months, making 151 performances attended before 400,000 people, it was declared. In addition, the touring missions gave receptions and exhibits to strengthen their relations with local Communists.

A cultural mission was sent by Communist China in September 1958 to Argentina for the establishment of economic, cultural and diplomatic relations. In May, 1959, a reporters group led by Yao Chin toured Chile, Uruguay, Brazil and Cuba. This group's tour was not ended until 28 July 1959 when it left Cuba by air for the Communist mainland. (For Communist China's missions abroad, see Appendix 4 at end of article).

(b) People from foreign countries were invited to visit Communist China. According to available data, such invitations were extended to all Latin American countries except Honduras, Nicaragua, El Salvador and the Dominican Republic, totaling 89 separate invitations. These invitations were extended to the Communist leaders in 12 countries; former government officials; delegates of the Communist Youth League, students, trade unions, women's organizations, parliamentary leaders, professors, writers, reporters, physicians and singers. These visitors were received by ranking Communist officials. They were taken to see important cities in the mainland. The Chinese Communists often took advantages of the meetings with the foreigners and waged propaganda calculated to agitate their relations with the United States. The Chinese Communists paid special attention to disseminate their experience of subversion. For instance, in receiving visitors from 12 countries on 3 March 1959, Mao Tse-tung expressed his active support of the struggle of Latin American people against the United States. It was agreed that they must strengthen their economic and cultural relations. (For a summary account of the visits of Latin American delegates to Communist China, see Appendix 5.)

4. Infiltration of Overseas Chinese Organizations

In view of the new Cuban government's tolerance of the Communist Party, the Chinese Communists reactivated the New Democratic League of Cuban Overseas Chinese. In March 1959, this organization began to operate openly. A declaration was issued calling the overseas Chinese to join the organization and to create problems for the Chinese community. Although its membership consists of scores of persons, its activities are a matter of great concern under the support of Cuban Communists. At present, various Chinese Communist propaganda materials are entering the Havana office of the Hsinhua News Agency and the new Chinese daily newspaper in large quantities. In Chile, the Chinese Communists have relied mainly on the Sino-Chilean Friendship Association to expand their activities, the association consisting of about 10 Pro-Communist Chinese and some Pro-Communist natives. Although the Chinese Communists have not been able to operate openly in other countries, they are using pro-Communist Chinese to agitate and divide the overseas Chinese. Pro-Communists are active in Venezuela. At present, the Chinese Communists have only weak control over the overseas Chinese in Latin America. But it is the Communist design to utilize the overseas Chinese as an instrument of Communist world domination. In fact, the Communist policy towards overseas Chinese is subservient to the Soviet aggressive policy. Mao Tse-tung has said: "The overseas Chinese can achieve real freedom, equality and perpetual peace only when the local people are actually liberated." Since the Chinese Communists reach out to win the support of the Latin American countries, including the pro-Communists there, they naturally attempt to infiltrate the overseas Chinese organizations.

5. International Communist Conspiracy

(a) The Soviet Union maintains diplomatic relations with only three countries in Latin America: Argentina, Uruguay and Mexico. The Soviet Embassies in these three countries have become the base of international Communist subversion. For instance, the Mexican Government uncovered evidences showing that the railroad workers strike in March, 1959, was under the direction of the Soviet Embassy in Mexico. As a result, the Soviet military attache Hsi-hsin-lu-fu and the second secretary of the Embassy, Ni-mi-su-fu, were ordered to leave the country within 48 hours. The Argentine Government also found that the workers strike in April, 1959, in the Argentine capital, was directed by the Soviet Embassy. Consequently, it ordered the Soviet consular Nicholas Lu-zu to leave within 48 hours. The government also declared, on 8 April, 1959, that the first secretary of the Embassy, Ti-mi-tui-ti Hsi-kang-nov-yuan-shih-tan-ting, and also Mu-la-ko-fu-ho-pa-hsi-li and I-fan-shiao-fu, persona non grata and ordered them to leave the country.

(b) In early 1959, the 21st Party Congress of the Communist Party of the USSR convened in Moscow. Communist delegates from 18 Latin American countries were invited to attend the congress. Speeches by 11 of these delegates at the Congress were given special attention by the USSR Communist Party. Proposals made by these delegates were given preferential consideration. Krushchev expressed his welcome of what the delegates called the "anti-American struggle" in Latin America. At the end of the Congress, these delegates left Moscow for Peiping and received a red carpet welcome from Mao Tse-tung, who assured them of "continued friendly support."

(c) According to the announcement of 21 August, 1959, by the assistant chief of the United States Central Intelligence Agency, Mr. Cabell, the Soviet Union has trained an increasing number of Latin American Communists for the establishment of a Communist dictatorship in their countries. He said that in May, 1959, Moscow sent an intelligence officer named White K'o-te-chin-chin to Cuba under an assumed name. This officer went to Cuba as a member of the Soviet trade delegation, but his actual purpose was to give instruction to Cuban Communists on how to penetrate the Castro government.

(d) According to a report released on 28 August 1959, by the Dominican Army Chief of Intelligence, A-pi-ssu, Raul Castro, brother of Fidel Castro, has conspired with Soviet spies to overthrow the governments of Niacaragua, Guatemala, Panama, Dominican Republic and Colombia. A fund amounting to US 25 million dollars was reported to have been transferred from Switzerland to Havana to finance the operation.

IV. Analysis of Chinese Communist Conspiracy and Our Necessary Vigilance

1. Analysis of Chinese Communist Conspiracy

All the facts mentioned above indicate that the Chinese Communists are actively penetrating Latin America for the purpose of creating a vast foundation for world revolution. According to an analysis by the United Press, the penetration of Latin America by the Chinese Communists has three objectives, as follows: (a) to prove it has the ideology and ability to interfere in international affairs although it is not a member of the United Nations; (b) to create Communism in the Latin American countries so as to assume the leadership in world Communist movement; and (c) to frighten the United States, mainly by destroying the United States' efforts of improving the economic conditions of these countries. This analysis is generally correct although it is not comprehensive enough to arouse a sense of urgency among the American people and us. A more comprehensive analysis is given below.

(a) The Chinese Communists are active in Latin America because they have received support from the Communists of these countries and from pro-Communist organizations. However, the Chinese Communists have largely capitalized on the anti-American feeling generated by local political and economic disturbances. They availed themselves of this anti-American sentiment to win the support of the people of Latin America. This strategy was well indicated by a speech given by the Mayor of Peiping in welcoming the former President of Mexico. He said: "Today US imperialists are still occupying our territory Taiwan. The Chinese people and the people of Latin America have a common interest in their struggle against imperialist aggression, for national independence and for world peace."

(b) The Chinese Communists have tried to win the support of Latin American countries in recent years because these countries represent a powerful bloc at the UN. This bloc has been a powerful support to the UN membership of the Republic of China. In order to replace the Republic of China as a member in the US, the Chinese Communists are trying to penetrate Latin American countries.

(c) None of the Latin American countries has recognized Red China. The purpose of the Chinese Communist activities in Latin America is to gain the recognition of one Latin country so as to improve its international position. The Communists could easily achieve this objective if there are internal disturbances and revolutions within each country. The West must increase its vigilance in view of current developments in the Cuban political scene and the rumors claiming that Brazil and Venezuela are going to establish diplomatic relation with the Soviet Union and probably giving recognition to Red China.

(d) The penetration of Latin America has been one of the important steps of world Communism. Hence, the purpose of all Communist activities in Latin America has been the strengthening of the Communist relation with Latin American Communist parties and pro-Communist organizations, encouraging these parties and organizations to overthrow their own government and isolating the United States by weakening the latter's leadership in Latin American countries. The ultimate purpose is to create Communist governments in Latin America.

2. Vigilance Needed

To cope with the intensified Communist activities in Latin America, the governments of the Latin American countries must take effective, emergency measures. These measures must be oriented for the prevention of the infiltration of Communists and fellow travelers. These governments should strengthen their cooperation and work for greater stability. The United States should revise its Latin American policy in the light of the economic problems and political crisis of that area. The new policy must serve to eliminate the anti-American feeling of the Latin American people. All this would eliminate the possibility of being taken advantage of by Sino-Soviet Communists.

Secretary Herter pointed out at the Foreign Ministers Conference in Santiago, Chile, on 13 August 1959, that "the United States has shown grave concern over the development in the Caribbean area in the past several months." He also said: "We have reasons for being concerned over the situation because, first of all, we cannot escape the consequences resulting from an emergency situation in the Caribbean area and secondly, as a member of the Organization of American States, we believe that the destruction of peace and friendly relations among the American states will have an adverse impact on the whole American community." In a conference held the next day, Herter stated: "The recent invasion and disturbances in the Caribbean area are giving international Communism a long sought after chance to undermine the democracy of the American countries." All this indicates the uneasiness and grave concern of the Caribbean developments on the part of the United States. Since we also are deeply concerned about the penetration of international Communism in Latin America, we wish the conference of foreign ministers of the American states success. We have reasons to hope and believe that the United States will take effective measures to influence the American states in their traditional anti-Communist stand and to preserve a free democratic society in Latin America.

As for China itself, we must take various effective measures to preserve its international interest and deal a blow to world revolution by international communism. Some of the suggestions are discussed below.

(a) The 20 Latin American republics have been the main supporter of the Republic of China in international affairs. They constitute half of 40 votes cast in the UN in support of China. The Chinese Communists are trying to strengthen their economic and cultural relations so as to establish diplomatic relations with these countries. Hence, we must continue to establish friendship and cooperation with the governments and people of the Latin American countries. We should also strengthen mutual political, cultural and economic relations. We must not only maintain present diplomatic relations but also develop a long and sincere friendship with them.

(b) There is a popular demand for land reform in Latin American countries, for they are agricultural countries. In addition, the need for land reform has been accented by international communism for propaganda purposes. The land reform policy postulated by Dr. Sun Yat-sen has proved to be the only effective policy of its kind. The rent reduction policy practiced in Taiwan and other policies contributing to the dispersion of rural land ownership and general improvement can be of great value to the American countries. We should therefore invite the high government officials, members of congress, the press, industrial leaders and scholars of these countries to visit Taiwan and provide them a chance to observe the progress in Taiwan.

(c) In recent years the Chinese Communists widened their invitation to cover a great number of people from various walks of life to visit the mainland. They organized the reception for these visitors according to carefully made plans. As a result, these visitors often got a distorted picture of the real situation in the mainland. The impact is especially great on left-wing writers and politicians who readily succumb to Communist propaganda. This means we must make clear the Communist conspiracy and alert the Latin American countries of the Communist menace. We must thoroughly expose the crimes of the Communist dictatorship on the mainland, including that of religious persecution. We must keep the people of Latin America informed of the real face of the Chinese Communists so that they will never again be beguiled by Communist propaganda.

(d) Chinese Communists conduct their activities in Latin America through local Communists and through local left-wing groups. Actually, there are many far-sighted democratic people and anti-Communist groups in these countries. Besides, Catholicism is a state religion in Latin America. We must therefore strengthen our cooperation with Latin American anti-Communist organizations and with the Catholics to counter the expansion of communism. We should organize non-government organizations comprised of anti-Communists of these countries.

(e) The overseas Chinese now living in the various Latin American nations have a clear understanding of the Communist dictatorship on the China mainland. They are patriotic and keen supporters of the Republic of China. They can stop the overseas Chinese organizations from going Communist. They can also play an important role in helping the local government to check the subversive activities of the Chinese Communists. Hence, we must take effective measures to bring the Chinese in Latin America into one anti-Communist organization that will play an active part in the anti-Communist movement.
